

Credit Threads: Central banks take center stage

November 5, 2021

How should investors think about inflation and less-accommodative monetary policy?

In this episode of Credit Threads, we discuss the U.S. Federal Reserve and its intention to taper its asset purchases, as well as the inflation challenges facing central bankers globally. Featuring: Ed Al-Hussainy, Senior Rates & Currency Analyst and Adrian Hilton, Head of Global Rates and Currency.

About this podcast

Credit Threads is a magazine-style podcast from Columbia Threadneedle's Eye of the Needle team. It's focused on the fixed-income markets and the factors that drive them. Featuring guests from Columbia Threadneedle Investments and regular segments that cover macroeconomics, inflation and central banks, and explanations of fixed-income asset classes, Credit Threads seeks to help investors understand how to generate and protect income, and how to untangle the confusing jargon of the credit markets.
